CHINA AS FUR BUYER.

For some years there has been a considerable development in the importation of furs into China from Europe, whilst hitherto this country has rather occupied the position of a large fur market. The evolution of this trade in furs, says a St. Petersburg paper, may be explained in the following way: the intellectual and well-to-do classes of China have been gradually adopting European clothing. But the Chinese for dressing does not answer requirements as represented in the European system of winter clothing. On the other hand, the chief fur market of the world, the Chinese fur dressers, Manchuria, has lately been covered by buyers from Moscow, Leningrad and Siberia, who purchased largely of Chinese merchants, and sent the furs on from Manchuria into Russia and Western Europe. In Karbin alone there are about a dozen large houses occupied with the purchase and export of furs, and the business they do may be calculated in hundreds of thousands of pounds sterling. Only very recently several new buyers have transferred from Chabarovsky to Karbin, without, however, breaking off their business relations with the Amur province, for fur now reaches Karbin both from the Amur and from the district of Ussuriysk, whereas previously a part of the Manchurian fur was brought into Chabarovsky. This fur consisted chiefly of what is called the Saman sable.

Mrs. Jane Remnant, who, though ninety-four, can sew without spectacles, is a living illustration of the proverb that it is never too late to mend.

Bushy into the Cheshire Cheese the other day, an American said to one of the waiters:
"See, I've come right here from Hartford, Conn., and I want to see the exact spot where Oliver Cromwell used to sit with Queen Elizabeth on Wednesdays when she came to have her favourite chop."

KEEP IT HANDY.
